- Following a stringent nomination, vetting and approval process, Kenya in June 2011 appointed Willy Mutunga, a former Ford Foundation officer, as chief justice of the country's newly established Supreme Court, forging ahead with the judicial reforms enshrined in the country's new Constitution. The country also appointed Deputy Chief Justice Nancy Baraza and Director of Public Prosecutions Keriako Tobiko.
- The justices were sworn into office June 20, 2011 and President Kibaki signed a bill officially operationalizing the Supreme Court on June 22, 2011.
- As outlined in the new Constitution, the Supreme Court will be charged with the interpretation of the Constitution and will hear appeals from the Court of Appeal and other lower courts.
